

Butterfly

A dramatic book with plenty of twists in the tale and the beautiful descriptions of Tuscany should keep every reader hooked - Womans Way

I can't believe that by the end of the week I shall be out of here. Feeling fragile . . . but free to finish the task of getting on my feet in the outside world.

Hebe Sayer, a writer of novels, poetry and sometimes 'children's stuff' believes that she has always been blessed, or cursed, with a surfeit of imagination. In the past her writing kept her troubled world together, helped her cope with a disastrous marriage and the turbulent teenage years of her daughters Cassandra and Pandora.

But she hasn't written a novel for nearly a year, not since the sudden tragic death of Pandora when Hebe's world began to unravel. Now as she prepares to leave the sanctuary and return to the real world, she starts a diary in the hope that it may help her become a whole functioning person again . . . strong enough to deal with the loss of her daughter, her ex-husband's increasingly younger girlfriends, and strong enough to help Cassandra rebuild her life. Yes, Cassie is mourning the loss of her sister but there is something else that deeply concerns Hebe – her daughter's sometimes stony expression and her anger towards her father.

To encourage her back into the world she once enjoyed, her agent, Maggie, has invited Hebe to meet the delicious and successful author Sam Ellis. But will she be able to cope with the challenge of a new relationship?

Will she ever be strong enough to emerge into the sunlight once more?
