

Eden Fading

A bittersweet rewarding read — U Magazine

Rachel re-read the five scrawled lines on the back of the postcard. There was no mistake. She was being offered a house in Tuscany for a whole month . . . perhaps life was going to improve after all . . .

Beautiful young widow Rachel has been struggling with life since the tragic death of her much-loved husband Simon.

Six months on, she is still troubled by the card left with some simple white flowers by his grave. It read: 'For my brother – from his sister, D'.

Perhaps a month in the sun would help her come to terms with his death and rid her mind of the niggling doubts the card has evoked.

Ensnared in her close friends' beautiful villa, strange happenings disturb the tranquil beauty and begin to unnerve Rachel. As events become more threatening, Rachel begins to rely on the dark and handsome Francesco. She is attracted to him but why is he reluctant to show his passion for her?

In the fading Tuscan summer, Rachel wonders if she has been followed to Italy by someone linked to Simon's death and to a past in which she has played no part.
